Butchery was said to have prevailed in the streets all during the day and rumors even went to the extreme saying that Father John of Cronstadt had left the bed on which he was supposed to be dying, to lead the mutineers.

Many of these sensational reports, were of course, entirely false, but sufficient details have been received to prove that about 3,000 sailors and a battalion of artillerists from one of the forts indulged in a mutiny which was only put down by about 7,000 Cossacks and troops of the imperiaguard hastily dispatched from St. Petersburg and from the garrison. near Peterhof, and that machine guns to be employed.

The governor of Cronstadt tele graphed the general staff at midnight that the mutiny had been crushed, that there was no likelihood of any renewal of the revolt today; that rethe guard had joined the mutineers were false, and that there was no truth in the reports that the mutineers had seized the arsenal and forts, governor in his telegram said many of the mutinous sailors tried to escape in boats to the mainland, but that they were captured and were be ing brought back to Cronstadt. He gave no estimate of the casualties. The correspondent of the Associated Press, who is on the ground, says that the officers estimate the casualties at 200, which is certainly very conservative, in view of the reports brought by refugees who fied from the town to the mainland. At this critical juncture there is no attempt made in government circles to minimize the seriousness of the mutiny, and it is admitt it that if a battalion of artiflerists joined the sailor in open revolt the mutinous spirit

As soon as the news of the mutiny was received here the seventeenth and eighteenth equipage of sallors of the guard were locked in their barracks and the barracks were surrounded by Cossacks. The sallors were furious with rage, and shouted from the windows that they were ready to join their mutinous comrades.
